Social-Emotional Health:

Perspectives for Parents as We Support our Children's Development

Over the past decade, advances in neuroscience have increased our ability to understand the foundations of children's growth and development from infancy to adolescence. As parents, teachers, coaches and community members, it is time to take a new look at many of the routines that have long-defined the adult-child relationship and the child's place in the world.

In asking "When Will What We Know Change What We Do?" Mike McKay will present this parent session to provide an opportunity for participants to confirm or to rethink and reshape routines and expectations as we strive to support our children during the most complex time of their lives.

Speaker: Mike McKay

Mike McKay is the Director of the Canadian Self-Regulation Initiative. Mike has been a teacher principal and superintendent during his 35 year career in education. He and his team support schools and communities in exploring how we can create the necessary conditions for high quality social/emotional learning environments that help kids learn and thrive.

Appropriate for parents and caregivers of children in grades K-12
